

Biographical data

Huei-mei Chu, MSN, is currently a Clinical Nurse Specialist in the Nursing Department of En Chu Kong Hospital, Taiwan.

Chris Green has been an Assistant Professor in the Hong Kong Polytechnic University's Department of English for the past nine years. He was previously at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology's Language Centre, and before that at the former Hong Kong Institute of Language in Education. His research interests are chiefly in the areas of pedagogical grammar, learner language, and written academic discourse analysis.

He An E is a Lecturer in the Department of English at The Hong Kong Institute of Education. Her research interests include classroom discourse analysis and application of corpus linguistics in classrooms.

Leng Hui is a Ph.D. student at Edith Cowan University, and will return to the School of Foreign Languages, Liaoning Normal University, China as an Associate Professor in Applied Linguistics. She can be contacted on lenghui01xinxiang@yahoo.com

Alex Poole is an Assistant Professor of English at Western Kentucky University. His interests include focus on form instruction, L2 reading strategies, and Spanish-English bilingualism.

Geoff P. Smith is an Associate Professor in the English Centre, the University of Hong Kong. His research interests include language contact and change, in particular the development and use of Tok Pisin, an English-based pidgin language spoken in Melanesia, on which he did his doctoral research and which is the basis of a recent monograph Growing Up with Tok Pisin. He is currently struggling to learn to read Chinese and speak Cantonese.

Susan Shiou-mai Su is a Senior Lecturer at Chang Gung College of Technology, Taiwan. She is also currently a Ph.D. student in the TESOL Program at Tamkang University, Taiwan. Her research interests lie mainly in sociolinguistic aspects of language learning and teaching in EFL/ESL context.